Free Genealogy Classes at the Clubhouse “Detectives of the Past”

Free genealogy classes will be taught by members of the Caroline Close Stuart Chapter, NSDAR (National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution) on Tuesday, October 4.

The morning class will cover beginning information about how to start a family tree, where to locate documents and how to organize the information collected. The afternoon class will go into more in depth information for anyone who has already gotten started but wants to sharpen skills.

Each class will end with information on how to become a member of the DAR. DAR Chapter members (including resident Jane McFarland) will also be on hand to help with research road blocks. They will also help prospective members who are interested in joining a Chapter find the documents needed.

Mary Jo Anderson, DAR Field Genealogist, who will help teach the class says.

“Tracking your family’s roots is “just like a puzzle and you keep working your way back,” one piece of information at a time. “If people enjoy history and want to help perpetuate our beginning roots this is the place you should be,” she says.

Tracing your family roots back further than two or three generations can be a daunting challenge.
